SATURDAY EVENIAL, APRIL 4.

A RATTLESNAKE ELECTROCUTED .- The Traylor Electric Company made a rather novel experiment in their office yesterday morning, and though it was not quite of so sensational a nature as the electrocution of Kemmler, still is attracted a good deal of

A rattlesnake eight and a half years old, and consequently possessed of eight rattles and a button for the additional sixth months, was killed by electricity. The serpent fought death with a good deal of vigor, and although a current of 250 voits was turned upon it the repille did not expire for nearly half an hour.

Experiments with rattlesnakes, no matter of what nature they may be, are glways to be dealt with carefully, and the electricians who proposed to sacrifice the hideous reptile took good pains that they should have all the fun and the enske all the honor of being a martyr to the cause of science. It was carfully imprisoned in a glass box and holes bored through so that the wires could touch it. One of the wires was placed next to the snake's head and another against its body and the current turned on.

His snakeship, while the centre of a curious gaze from several spectators took its fate very calmly, although an omnious shaking of its rattles as the current darted through its body indicated that it was not

The reptile wriggled a little after the pain of the experiment began to make itself file. but in a few minutes it sank into a stupified state, and the only signs of life were an occasional movement of its souly body. In half an hour life was extinct.

The wires which touched the coils of the serpent burned with a faint, white light near the point of contact with the flesh, and the burning make gave forth a sickening odor.

The "rattlet" which was electrocuted had formerly been on exhibition at Heu er's restaurant. - Richmond Dispatch
